

PRINCIPLED POLICING – PROCEDURAL JUSTICE AND IMPLICIT BIAS

This course is the result of a collaborative partnership between the California Department of Justice, the Commission on Peace Officers Standards and Training, the Stockton and Oakland Police Departments, Stanford University and the California Partnership for Safe Communities.

This procedural justice and implicit bias training will consist of six areas that focus on policing approaches that emphasize respect, listening, neutrality and trust, while recognizing and addressing implicit biases that can be barriers to these approaches. As a result, the training will work to create a broader awareness of both procedural justice and implicit bias in order to build trust and improve public and officer safety.

This course is designed to be delivered in a number of formats and can either be set in a regional setting or delivered for specific agency needs to include community members. Please contact the CJ Center for details.
